Welcome
Choosing a university or four-year college to complete your education and receive a bachelor's degree is a major decision. The Department of Sociology, Anthropology, and Health Administration and Policy (SAHAP) at UMBC offers three undergraduate majors and two minors, as well as a master's and post-baccalaureate certificates.

Sociology (SOCY) is the study of social relationships among people and the institutions and organizations they use to organize these relationships. There are many subfields within sociology, including medical sociology, aging, population, religion, gender roles, family, work organizations, occupations, crime and delinquency, urban sociology, political sociology and others described in the course listings below. All majors are required to take classes in methods, theory and statistics.

Anthropology (ANTH) is the worldwide comparative study of humankind, present and past. The subfield of cultural anthropology examines the relationship of culture, human meaning, and the social, political, and economic forces that affect our worlds. Our major, which focuses on cultural anthropology, provides students with an understanding of cultural diversity, human social organization and social structure, and social research methods.

The Health Administration and Policy Program (HAPP) is designed for career-oriented students who plan to seek employment in one of a variety administrative, supportive, planning, research or policy positions. Students can expect to achieve a comprehensive understanding of health care issues and the health care system that will underpin various educational and career goals; training in basic administrative, managerial and methodological skills; preparation for entry-level employment in community health and health care organizations and in support systems in the private and public sectors; and preparation for a graduate program leading to an advanced degree in a health related field.

Majors also have available several options within the programs. One is independent study courses, which enable students to study particular areas of interest with individual faculty members. Another is the honors program, which consists of three courses that emphasize individual work with faculty members.

Students in SOCY & ANTH can also enroll in a community service and learning internship, while earning credit hours towards their overall bachelor’s degree. Students in HAP are required to take an internship (6 credits) which is applied to their major.

The department has chapters in the national honor societies of Lambda Alpha (Anthropology) and Alpha Kappa Delta (Sociology). The department also has student-run organizations for undergraduates and graduates, which include: Council of Majors (ANTH & HAP) and Sociology Graduate Student Organization (SGSO).

Majors in SOCY, ANTH and HAP often enroll in professional and academic graduate programs after receiving their undergraduate degrees. The department also offers a Bachelor's/Master's in Applied Sociology option that enables students to reduce the number of credits required to complete the master's degree.

Advising
Advising is an essential component of academic success. All undergraduates are required to participate in academic advising each Fall and Spring semester in order to register. Each student will be assigned a faculty advisor.

Undergraduate students should contact Debbie Sanford at dsanford@umbc.edu for more information.
Graduate students should contact Faith Dinh at faithdinh@umbc.edu for more information.
